

I am an XM radio subscriber and have found their programming services to be of particular value while traveling from place to place, including the local traffic and weather programming information and advisory services they offer. I have not stopped listening to local, over-the-air broadcasts, especially in my home area so I can't imagine why NAB is lobbying to limit XM's programming except to limit competition in what should be an open communications environment. XM is not competing for spectrum, so it doesn't seem to be a matter for the FCC to be concerned with.
